London sees surge in luxury property prices

Prices for prime London property surged in the final quarter of 2019, the latest Coutts London Prime Property Index found. On average, prices increased by 5.3% in 2019 – with 4.8% of this coming from Q4 alone.

With 10.1% more properties sold in Q4 2019 than the same period in 2018, buyer demand is certainly climbing. Despite this, the number of prime London properties put up for sale decreased by 11.8% year-on-year, with the final quarter accounting for 8.9% of the drop.

Katherine O'Shea, from the Coutts Real Estate Investment Service, commented: "The numbers for the last quarter of 2019 could be showing us a distinct change of mood in the luxury property market. It's been subdued and filled with uncertainty for some time, but we're now seeing the potential for brighter times ahead."

Government fails to meet housebuilding targets

The government is not on track to meet its target of one million new homes by 2025, with just 157,550 new build dwellings starts in the year to September 2019 – a 7% decrease compared to the same period the previous year, new government figures have shown.

More positively, new build completions rose to 177,980 (a 9% increase on the same period last year); however, the increase was not significant enough to hit targets.

A lack of available land and unnecessary red tape have been cited as barriers to the successful delivery of high-quality housing.

Planners are hoping that answers might be found in a highly anticipated government white paper on 'Accelerated Planning', expected to be published in early 2020. It is hoped that this document will deliver radical proposals for a faster and more streamlined planning system.

House prices set to grow by 15%

The latest sales market forecast from Knight Frank predicts a positive outlook for the UK property market over the next four years.

The headline rate of house price growth slowed across the UK to just 0.7% in the year to October 2019. Interest rates are set to normalise in 2020, although they are still expected to remain low, at less than 2% by 2023.

Knight Frank predicts that house prices will grow modestly by 2% in 2020, with a more optimistic 15% cumulative growth expected between 2020 and 2024. Meanwhile, rents are predicted to rise by 10% in this period.

Regional differences are likely, however, with the South East and East of England expected to be star performers over the next five years.

Despite the so-called 'Boris bounce' since the General Election, Knight Frank believes that market momentum will only really start to take off once the Brexit deal is completed.

With 10.1% more properties sold in Q4 2019 than the same period in 2018, buyer demand is certainly climbing.
